TWO NEW INSTITUTES AND THREE NAME CHANGES

The name of the Faculty of Arts was changed to the Faculty of Arts and Science from July first last. The new name gives recognition to the importance of the pure sciences, and more properly describes the work of the faculty.

Another change in name is that of the School of Business, formerly the Institute of Business Administration. It has a new director, Dr. O. Warren Main, and a new policy, which eliminates night courses leading to the degree of Master of Commerce.

The former Department of Italian, Spanish and Portuguese is now designated the Department of Italian and Hispanic Studies.

An Institute of Earth Sciences under the direction of Dr. J. Tuzo Wilson has been established at the University. On the Institute's executive committee are Profs. F. E. Beamish, G. B. Langford, D. A. McRae and G. S. Watson. The Institute will co-ordinate research studies and bring together scientists in any subjects in the earth sciences. It will organize seminars; promote co-operation between departments in the use and supervision of research equipment; and assist in organizing field expeditions, particularly to remote areas.

Another new establishment is the Great Lakes Institute, under Prof. G. B. Langford's direction. It will also bring together specialists in several fields—physics, zoology, geology, meteorology, chemistry and botany, for a joint study of the Lakes. Co-operating with the University is a strong group of governmental agencies, including the Federal Department of Transport, the Defence Research Board, National Research Council, Canadian Committee on Oceanography, Ontario Department of Lands and Forests, and Ontario Water Resources Commission. The converted navy ship, Porte Dauphine, operated by the Department of Transport, is the base for research going on under Prof. R. E. Deane's direction.

Both the Association of the Teaching Staff and the two Faculty Unions agreed last spring that all teaching staff of the rank of lecturer and above should automatically be members of the Faculty Club. Annual fees of $12.00 for lecturers and assistant professors, and of $18.00 for those of higher rank, are deducted from monthly salary cheques unless a staff member states in writing that he does not wish to belong.

Membership qualifications for research and administrative staffs are essentially the same as in the former Faculty Unions.

TV LECTURES IN RUSSIAN 1a

AID EXTENSION STUDENTS

The University of Toronto will offer an elementary course in Russian over CBC television this session, and for the first time will recognize TV lectures as a formal part of work leading towards the Bachelor of Arts degree. The new policy applies to General Course students registered in Russian 1a through the Division of University Extension, and is subject to the following provisions set by the Senate:

(a) that enrolment in the TV course be limited to 50 regular students ("regular students" means those students who have met the admission requirements and are proceeding towards the degree);

(b) that the students meet in groups of 25 for a two-hour tutorial class at the University every second week;

(c) that the students complete weekly exercises;

(d) that each student does such reading and writes such book reports as are required of other students taking Russian 1a;

(e) that the students write the same examination as the other students taking Russian 1a;

(f) that the students pay the regular fee.

The TV course will consist of 48 half-hour lectures by two members of the Department of Slavic Studies, Professor Maya Jenkins and George Harjan. They will be carried over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation Toronto channel from noon to 12.30 p.m. every Saturday and Sunday beginning November 5, and will be produced by the CBC in co-operation with the University.

For the 50 students working for credit, the course will eliminate many hours of travel to and from the campus for evening classes. In addition, it is hoped that several hundred other people will follow the TV lectures on their own, supplementing the lessons with the standard University textbook and workbook. By the end of the session, even non-credit students should be able to use 800 to 1,000 words of Russian in reading and simple conversation.

The new series follows successful use of closed circuit television for teaching in the Faculties of Dentistry and Medicine, and three years of well received educational broadcasts by members of the University staff on the CBC "Live and Learn" series. This year's series will be very different, however, from previous ones in psychology, physics, French and geology mounted by the CBC and University. They consisted of 10 or 12 lectures connected loosely by subject matter but not making up a formal course of study, so that viewers could enjoy isolated broadcasts. The Russian course will demand regular viewing and a fair amount of homework.

"Live and Learn: Russian" originated in discussions last winter between Professor G. S. N. Luckyj, Chairman of the Department of Slavic Studies, and Professor D. C. Williams, Director of the Division of University Extension and Chairman of the Presidential Advisory Committee on Television. Both felt that a TV course in elementary Russian grammar and conversation would be an ambitious but desirable move in adult education, because of Russian's importance to scientists, diplomats, teachers, businessmen and students of world affairs, and as a key to the culture and literature of one of the great Powers.

Professor Maya Jenkins and George Harjan, of the Department of Slavic Studies, will present a series of 48 lectures in elementary Russian over television this session.

In subsequent lectures with the Committee on Television, Professor Luckyj suggested using the TV lectures for credit, an idea which was supported by both the Board of Arts Studies and the Senate.

For its part, the CBC was enthusiastic, although the longer series involved greater costs and scheduling problems than previous "Live and Learn" series. CBC interest was shown in an offer to repeat the first two lectures—key lessons on the alphabet—late Sunday evenings. Even before the course began, CBC officials were talking about possible credit courses by radio.

A typical lesson in the new series will consist of a brief review of past material, introduction of new vocabulary, exposition of new grammatical material, and oral drill with active participation by the viewer. All new material will be illustrated by charts, pictures and diagrams. Almost from the first, the student will be exposed to Russian conversation between Professor Jenkins and Mr. Harjan, who also will introduce some aspects of Soviet culture each time.

Both instructors are native Russian speakers. Professor Jenkins, who is in charge of Russian language teaching in the Department of Slavic Studies, left the Soviet Union after World War II and studied at London University before coming to Canada with her husband in 1953. Mr. Harjan joined the University this autumn after 11 years of study and teaching in the United States, including three years at the University of Oklahoma where he conducted a course in Russian over television.

Royal Ontario Museum

DR. F. A. URQUHART presented a paper at the 14th International Congress of Entomologists in Vienna this summer. He visited the British Museum of Natural History and discussed museum matters with staff members. He also visited the Paris Museum where he met Dr. Barlotz, Dr. Dorst and Dr. Joannin.

DR. A. G. EDMUND visited a farm near Wallaceburg in the spring to examine bones of a mastodon which had been uncovered some time ago by construction machinery. A follow-up visit in late August yielded much valuable material. The value of this find, which produced the tusks, many fragments of the head and jaws and some leg and foot bones, lies in the information available regarding the habitat of the animal. Numerous samples of contemporaneous wood, freshwater shells and pollen-bearing muck were taken. It is anticipated that a temporary exhibit illustrating the results will be prepared at the Museum during the winter.

DR. R. R. H. LEMON attended the XXI International Geological Congress held in Copenhagen, Aug. 15-25, and also took part in a field excursion in Scania and Crotland, Sweden. Large numbers of fossils collected from the Lower Palaeozoic rocks of both these areas will form a valuable addition to the Museum collection.

Scott and Crossman attended the annual meeting of the American Society of Ichthyologists and Herpetologists held in Chicago June 17-19. Dr. Scott, who was re-elected to the Board of Governors of the Society, presented a paper entitled "Fishery Survey in Arctic Canada."

THE NEW MAILING LIST

Department heads throughout the University have helped in the preparation of a new mailing list for the STAFF BULLETIN, VARSITY NEWS, and VARSITY GRADUATE. These periodicals should go to staff members of all ranks who would like to receive them. Secretaries and others in non-academic categories are eligible.

Applicants also should state whether they hold University of Toronto degrees, diplomas, or certificates. This final morsel of information will prevent duplicate mailings of VARSITY NEWS which is addressed to all graduates by mechanical equipment.
